Professional Wellness During a Pandemic

Practical information on how to make it happen
in your medical group

September 30, 12:00 pm – 1:00 pm (CST)

Join your colleagues across the nation to stay updated on how to support yourself and your medical group during a pandemic. Discover the common stressors that have surfaced during the pandemic based on national data. This free one hour online session will provide resources you can immediately put in place for yourself and your medical group.

Presented by:

Mark Linzer, MD, MACP

Clinician researcher with over 20 years studying provider stress, burnout, and evidence based interventions to address them.

Elizabeth Goelz, MD

Clinician researcher and Chief Wellness Officer with practical experience for medical group leaders and individuals.

Martin Stillman, MD, JD

Clinician researcher and Mediation and Conflict Resolution Officer with experience locally and nationally.

Rahul Koranne, MD, MBA, FACP

President and CEO of the Minnesota Hospital Association

Institute for Professional Worklife
(IPW)

The IPW provides support, guidance, leadership, and consultation to individuals and entities both locally and nationally who are looking to understand the burnout epidemic and effect change in their institutions.

Objectives: At the end of this program you will be able to:

1. Identify the common stressors during the pandemic based on national data
2. Discuss real world options for supporting your medical group and preventing burnout during challenging times
3. Identify at least one intervention you can implement locally
